RESTRAINT REMOVED, LAW FORCES TO ACT

Curtis of Norfolk and Col. Lindbergh, Himself, Trying to Disclose Clues Which May Lead to Arrest of Brutal Murders After Body Is Found In Wood

BY JAMES F. KILGALLEN
International News Service Correspondent.

With President Hoover an active participant, the nation's forces of law and order combined today in a sweeping search for the brutal murderers of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's infant son.

From the White House, the President ordered all federal agencies to work on the case, instructing them not to relax until the criminals responsible have been tracked down and punished.

Spurred by the President's instructions to consider the slaying a "live and never-to-be-forgotten case," state and municipal authorities bent all the forces at their command to co-operate in the search.

NEW YORK, May 13.—"I am convinced that Dr. Condon was in touch with the actual kidnapers of the Lindbergh baby or the representative of the kidnapers."

Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall, of Mercer-co, made this important announcement this afternoon after he and New Jersey state police had questioned Dr. John F. ("Jafsie") Condon, the 72-year-old professor who acted as intermediary in late March and early April when Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh gave $50,000 ransom for the return of his kidnapped baby whose decomposed body with a fractured skull showing it had been murdered was found late yesterday about five miles from the Lindbergh estate.

WOULD PROSECUTE CASE
Marshall will prosecute the case in the event the police now engaged in one of the greatest man hunts in American history succeed in tracking down the slayer of the baby.

NEW YORK, May 13.—Every law-enforcement agency in the United States was mobilized today in the greatest man hunt in history in a grimly determined effort to solve and avenge the wanton murder of the baby son of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

While the pathetic form of the baby lay in a Trenton undertaker's parlor and tragedy enveloped the home of the "Lone Eagle,"—five miles from where the body was found in a clump of brush near the roadside—the law, long restrained by the forlorn hope the child might be found alive, was galvanized into action.

DROP ALL RESTRAINTS
The police, confronted with the most appalling crime in the nation's history, threw off all restraints that had hampered them thus far and launched a new investigation into the criminal aspects of the case with a fervor and zeal that promised rapid-fire developments.

Dr. John F. ("Jafsie") Condon, university professor of New York City, who negotiated with the supposed kidnapers in the hoax by which Colonel Lindbergh was swindled of $50,000 and John Hughes Curtis, Norfolk, Va., shipbuilder who for weeks tried to contact the abductors in another area, were questioned by Colonel H. Norman Schwarzkopf, superintendent of the New Jersey state police, at the temporary headquarters near Hopewell and then turned over to Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall of Mercer-co for further grilling.

Colonel Schwarzkopf emphasized that neither Professor Condon nor Curtis were under arrest. They were being questioned for the purpose of obtaining "leads" that would aid the police in tracking down the kidnaper-killers.

WENT VOLUNTARILY
It was said that both Condon and Curtis voluntarily went to Hopewell to render all the assistance they could to the police.

Colonel Lindbergh himself was reported to be with the authorities at Hopewell, where he could help solve the case. The Colonel for days past has been away on a short secret mission on which he

CONDOLE PARENTS

Throngs Astounded As News Is Sent Out

NEW YORK, May 13.—In shocked sadness New York today received the tragedy of the kidnaped Lindbergh baby's murder, which stirred the entire world to grief and sympathy for the bereaved parents, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh.

Newspapers, telegraph wires, radios and bulletin boards flashed the news throughout the city last night that the body of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., was found.

With incredible speed the report spread. Crowds poured into the streets, in the transit, in the Park avenue district, in the theater zone of Times Square, in outlying sections.

Strangers, under the stir of a common sympathetic interest, exchanged comment on the news. Despite a penetrating rain, throngs gathered in front of newspaper offices, watching each successive bulletin.

In theaters, restaurants, street cars, subways, among groups gathered at street corners or in doorways, the depressing news was discussed with horror and condemnation. Gay places, there was a muted restraint in gaiety.

Thousands of telephone calls poured in on newspaper offices and police stations requesting authoritative information about the finding of the body.

SEEK RECEIVER FOR BUS FIRM

Buckeye Stages Again Begins Action Against Ohio Scenic Stages, Inc.

COLUMBUS, May 13.—Bankruptcy action against the Ohio Scenic Stages Incorporated of Circleville accompanied by a request for a receiver was recommended in Federal court today by the Buckeye Stages Incorporated assisted by two other creditors.

A debt of $10,817 against the Circleville bus firm was entered by the Buckeye Stages, which claims to have an account of $10,757 past due the Miller Publishing Company of Cleveland and The Guide Publishing Co. of Newark.

As in a previous suit which was dropped, Buckeye Stages charged Eugene Porter, president and director of Ohio Scenic Stages with converting the company's property to his own use.

The principal amount of the debt of $10,817, owed by the alleged bankrupt to Buckeye Stages, consists of money advanced for operating losses and finally due to the fact that Porter converted funds and use of alleged bankrupt property to his own use.

Two buses in the name of Porter and his wife have been used in the company's business and "has these parties" rightfully being taken to the courts.

The Miller Publishing Company's account of $10,757 was paid at $114 a week of the Guide Publishing Co. advertisement at $6.

swindlers who were seeking to mulch him out of more ransom money at the time the body of his murdered son was found.

Colonel H. Norman Schwarzkopf revealed in an official bulletin issued today.

Schwarzkopf announced that at the time the body was discovered in the woods, Lindbergh was abroad a boat off the Jersey Coast seeking to recover his child from a gang of crooks who sought to convince the Colonel they were the kidnapers and had the baby.

NEW YORK, May 13.—Inhuman as the unutterably shocking kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh baby is, it appeared today that perhaps the world's most heartless crime was perpetrated on the grief-bowed parents of the men who extorted $50,000 ransom from Dr. John F. Condon, New York University lecturer.

For it they were the real kidnapers, they were also the murderers of the child, and were trafficking in the body of the dead, with full knowledge of their savage deed.

DETROIT, May 13.—Her head bowed in grief by the shocking news of her little grandson's death at the hands of kidnapers, Mrs. Evangeline Lindbergh, mother of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, left here today for Hopewell, N. J., her famous son's home.

TRENTON, May 13.—The usually quiet New Jersey state house which closes its doors at five o'clock every afternoon, was blazing with light and echoing to the staccato bark of typewriters and telegraph instruments this morning as thousands of words went out all over the world from the 200 newspapermen who rushed to Trenton as soon as the news was heard that the body of the Lindbergh baby had been found.

All night long groups stood on street corners discussing the

NEW SHREDDED BISCUIT MAKING BIG HIT

Grocers Say Housewives Welcome Many Improvements in Kellogg's WHOLE WHEAT Biscuit

Local grocers have pronounced the new Kellogg's WHOLE WHEAT Biscuit one of the most up-to-date food products on the market. It offers many outstanding and popular features. For one thing, the biscuits are toasted a golden brown on both top and bottom—not just one side.

The new Kellogg biscuit is also baked in a more convenient, economical size. Two biscuits just fit the cereal bowl—and you get 15 to the package instead of a dozen.

Mothers will especially be interested in the fact that every package is certified for food value by the Medical Arts Laboratory of Philadelphia. These new biscuits are considered a splendid food for both adults and children. With either hot or cold milk, you achieve a well-balanced amount of vitamins, minerals, proteins and carbohydrates.

The Kellogg Company uses a special process of "pressure-cooking" which retains all the food value of the whole wheat and makes it very easy to digest. At the same time it develops delicious flavor.

These improved biscuits can be identified by the name, Kellogg's, and the red and green package. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

First to discover the disappearance of Charles Lindbergh, Jr., was his nurse, Miss Betty Gow (above). The girl has been employed as the baby's nurse for a year.

and Orville Wilson that the body was pretty well concealed by leaves, dirt and brush.

"The skull had a hole in it about the size of a quarter just above the forehead. The body was lying in a depression, as though an attempt had been made to bury it face down."

"Mercer county physician, Dr. Charles H. Mitchell, and the county coroner, Walter Swayze, were immediately called in."

Coroner Swayze said: "The toes of the right foot overlap, which is a means of identification, according to Colonel Lindbergh. The large toe completely overlaps the toe next to it."

The coroner added that the dead child had curly blond hair, eight molar teeth, that it was 34 1-2 inches in height, all adding to the identification.

"Diagnosis of the cause of death is a fractured skull due to external violence," said the report.

IN OPEN 2 MONTHS
The autopsy further declared that the body had been in the open for at least two months and was nearly a skeleton.

Before removing to his isolated home atop the Sourland mountains, Colonel Lindbergh lived at Mount Rose, not far from where the baby was found.

MEATS FOR LOW-COST MEALS

Nothing seems quite to take the place of meat in most American households. This fact says the Bureau of Home Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, has doubtless increased the hardship of families whose funds and food supplies have been too low to include the usual quantity of meat in their food budgets. Meat furnishes the flavor and contrast which are especially needed to give the limited diet to which many households nowadays are forced by lack of money. With the fall in meat prices, however, the bureau suggests may come an opportunity to add flavor and variety to the economy diet by including more meat.

Meat prices are down—for some meats astonishingly low. And meat, of course, not only gives zest and flavor, but has high food value. Lean meat is a protein food—one of the best. It is a good source of iron, it is an excellent source of phosphorus, which is another of the indispensable food substances, and it contains other mineral salts. Lean meat, is one of the foods down to prevent pellagra. In the pellagra regions, families whose diet includes lean meat, either flesh, fish, or fowl, do not have pellagra, even though they have otherwise the same foods as the pellagra-stricken families.

The bureau has some suggestions as to ways in which housewives may perhaps contrive economy diet that will include more meat. Boiling beef, at 10 cents a pound, is well below 1931 prices. Fresh shoulder of pork can be had in some markets for 10 to 12 cents, smoked picnic shoulder at 8 cents, chuck beef pot roast at 15 cents, breast of lamb at 8 cents, and breast of veal at 10 to 12 cents a pound. Bacon, which furnishes fuel value and flavor, if not much protein, can be had at 15 cents a pound which is below the pre-war price.

Using meat most economically and at the same time satisfactorily, is largely a matter of skill in cooking the cheaper and less tender cuts, says Miss Lucy M. Alexander, associate specialist in foods. These cuts furnish all the food values of the more expensive meat, and they can be made tender, either by slow cooking, in moisture, or by grinding or pounding them before they are cooked.

Boiling beef is the cheapest beef on the market, and besides being good when simply boiled, is the most commonly used for stews. A boiled beef should not actually be boiled. Let it simmer below the boiling point, until tender. Add dumplings for variety, or serve the meat with horseradish.

Braising—i. e., browning in a little fat, and then cooking slowly in the meat juice or in added liquid in a covered utensil—is one of the best methods of making tough meat tender. Thus pot roast and Swiss steak, which are cooked by braising, are made tender by the long slow cooking in the covered kettle or the covered skillet. For quick cooking, the cheaper cuts of beef can be ground, and then broiled or baked just as if tender to begin with, appearing on the table as hamburger, meat patties, meat loaf, or broiled on toast.

With raisin stuffing, cured pork shoulder when broiled, makes a very cheap and appetizing roast, and the left-over bits can be used in potato cakes or with noodles for another day. Fresh pork shoulder or ham can be made delicious by broiling with savory bread crumb stuffing. Then there are spare ribs—a winter dish on the farm, but available in the city at any time of the year. They are good baked, with or without stuffing. Cooked with sauer-kraut or fresh cabbage, spare-ribs make a cheap and appetizing dish as long as the weather is cool.

When it comes to lamb, all cuts should be tender because the meat animal is young. Very little mutton is marketed now. Breast of lamb and shoulder of lamb are the cheapest cuts, and breast of lamb with forcemeat stuffing is particularly economical and at the same time attractive meat dish.

Child's Mother Standing Strain

HOPEWELL, N. J., May 13.—And so endeth the story. It is indeed the end. Not until the lifeless body of her baby was found did Anne Lindbergh believe it. But now she knows her staunch hopes were mere will of the wisps. Now she realizes there is nothing more worth mentioning to be said.

Who kidnapped little Charlie Lindbergh? Why did they kill him? Where can they be found? These may be important questions for the police, for society, to Anne Lindbergh everything has been told in one word—"dead."

SITS FROZEN
She sits silent today, silent and frozen. Her mother and the devoted friends, who have tried for 73 days to cheer her, find nothing to say, save that she must be brave for the sake of the new baby to be born in September.

She nods woodenly. Of course, she will bear up for that unborn child's sake. But why not? It is all over now—the anxiety, the futile prayers, the eager search for a missing baby.

Gone is the mother's self-hypnosis, induced by repetition of the consolation: "He is safe and sound." The baby who would have had two candles on his cake next month is dead. No use telling herself comforting fairy tales now.

But Anne Lindbergh does not sob, scream, nor call out loudly against a fate that has snuffed out a little boy's life. Always reticent, reserved, undemonstrative, even now she keeps the torrents of her emotions locked up tight.

NOTIFIED HUSBAND
They say she did not weep when the police informed her, gently of course, that a body had been located. Instead, she went to the telephone and tried to get in touch with her husband, who had been gone for some days on another of his hectic searches for the boy. She tried for almost an hour, before she reached him. He said he would return at once.

They did not let her see the partially decomposed body of the baby that had been chubby and rosy when last she saw him. They did not tell her that the coroner had reported the baby's head had been fractured and that there was a hole in his forehead an inch wide. If they had, she might have consoled herself with the belief it was not her baby—no one could prove it was!

But Betty Gow, the Scotch nurse who tended the child, went to the morgue in Trenton and saw the miserable little skeleton that had been lying under leaves for more than two months. She looked, her mouth swung open, she cried: "Ah!" in a gruesome whisper, and leaned heavily on the two state troopers who stood at either side of her.

For she saw the twisted first and second toes of the right foot that were the identifying marks of the baby from the first; she recognized his blonde hair, his eight upper teeth, his large head. And the nurse was convinced this was her little charge.

Completely overcome, Betty Gow returned to the Lindbergh home to face the mother of that dead baby. One look at her face and Anne Lindbergh knew the worst.

NOT TOLD OF CRIME
She has not yet been told officially believe the child died as the result of a "fractured skull due to external violence." Perhaps that knowledge would be the last straw. Enough that the baby was stolen, that he is dead. To know that he had been killed by a bullet wound, a blow with "a blunt instrument unmercifully wielded" or "banged against a tree" would be the final twist of the knife in her heart.

The gaping crowds stand, rain-soaked, to read bulletins of the pursuit of the kidnapers, indignation surging in every breast. Clerks mutter, hiding their broken voices: "A thing like this makes any man feel funny." Women weep.

Anne Lindbergh neither knows nor cares.

ALL WORLD IS SHOCKED

so touched the world's heart," said El Sol.

"Any measures taken by the United States to rid herself of such criminals will not seem too drastic to us," commented A. B. C.

ROME, May 13.—Press and public in Italy united today in condemning the brutal murder of the Lindbergh baby.

All newspapers gave wide prominence to discovery of the child's body.

"The blood-stained crib at Hope-well," said the Popolo Di Roma, "cries for vengeance. All humanity has been hurt in what is most dear and sacred in life—its sons."

MEXICO CITY, May 13.—Mexico City, scene of the first meeting of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and Anne Morrow, was deeply moved today over the tragic death of their infant son.

The scores of friends of the Lindberghs and the Mowrows, made during the late Dwight Morrow's term as Ambassador to Mexico and during the frequent visits of the Lindberghs, were sorrowed almost beyond words.

PARIS, May 13.—On behalf of the people of Paris, Francois Lator, president of the Municipal council, sent a cablegram to Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh today, expressing "the heartfelt sympathy of the government and the people in your great sorrow."

TOKYO, May 13.—Japan, known as a nation devoted to its children, was astounded today at the murder of the Lindbergh baby.

The Press was quick to compare the Lindbergh murder with Chinese bandits, whom it has frequently referred to as "baby killers."

LONDON, May 13.—The tragic ending of the Lindbergh kidnapping was revealed to most of England at breakfast time today when the screaming headlines and elaborate picture displays of the morning papers stunned the public.

All classes were amazed with horror. The crime was discussed excitedly by everyone. On their way to offices and factories or street cars, buses and subways, all joined in voicing their various reactions to the tragedy.

Speed in the Nineties
WHEN this modern age of high-speed automobiles and aircraft smiles patronizingly at the "horse and buggy nineties" it forgets that the locomotives of 40 years ago established speed records which still stand.
The express train, which in England recently ran 105 1/2 miles in 100 minutes, broke a record with its average speed of 62 miles an hour. A little chugging of the record books classes it as merely a good run.
It was in the days from 1890 to 1905 that the men in the cab made the world sit up and gasp. And most of the laurels were won on this side of the Atlantic. A New York Central train in 1893 averaged 112.5 miles an hour. Eleven years later a Philadelphia and Reading train was timed at 115.2 miles an hour. The Plant System in Florida in 1901 shot a train over five miles of track in two and one-half minutes, setting a 120-mile mark that still stands.
For long-distance speed records there was a Pennsylvania run in 1895 of 55.8 miles at an average speed of 74.5 miles per hour and another penny run of 133 miles at an average speed of 75.84 miles an hour. A Lehigh Valley train in 1897 maintained a speed of 80 miles an hour, for 43 miles, and in 1897 a Burlington averaged 95.7 miles an hour for 15 miles. The Great Western line in England covered 118 miles in 84 minutes in 1904.
Railroad progress in the last 20 years has been in the direction of safety and dependability rather than speed. Within the last few weeks the speed of some crack trains has been reduced as an economy move.

Progress in the Air
THE heavier-than-air flying machine is just launching on its thirtieth year of flying. The first that "worked" took the air in 1903 after years of disappointing experimentation.
It was in Kitty Hawk, N. C., in 1903 that the Wright brothers—Wilbur and Orville—put motor to canvas wings and soared with the birds. Through a flimsy machine and one which the most daring flyers of today would hesitate to "fly up" in, it was epoch making and, for its time, more marvelous in the public mind than the huge passenger and freight carrying planes of today.
Great as it has been, the development of the airplane since its invention a score and five years ago does not impress itself upon the average mind. So easily does the mind forget such things that most people little remember when endurance flights were measured in minutes and when the national population of aviators could be counted on the fingers of two hands. Those pioneer planes were not more certain of leaving the ground at the appointed hour than they were certain of returning safely to earth.
It is a long step from those early biplanes, with their clumsy control planes, frail wings and operator's seat perched precariously out in front, to the modern ship of the air with its trim and sturdy wings, powerful motors, ship-shaped rubber and luxurious quarters for crew and passengers.
Such comparisons are convincing that travel by air is far safer than general public considers it. There are many accidents but it must be remembered that there are many machines in the air to meet with accident.

On Trial of Cold Germ
THAT bane of man's existence and a scourge of medical science, the common cold, is in real danger of going the way of many other human maladies and their causes. Dr. Alphonse R. Dochez has filtered out a virus suspected of causing colds.
This is the most promising approach to the cure and prevention of colds yet reported. If this virus proves to be the enemy which has so long eluded science, there only remains the task of developing a toxic agent to combat it. Discovery of the cause is more than half the job.
Though the communicable cold is the most common of man's ailments it has proved one of the most difficult maladies to stamp out and control. Far more malignant diseases have been tracked down and destroyed. Nor is this due to neglect by science, which has, on the contrary, devoted decades to its study.
The common cold is the cause of more discomfort and greater economic loss than any other ailment. Moreover, more serious complications result from it in thousands of cases each year. One year of comparative freedom from this plague would more than compensate for the money effort spent in fighting it.

"THE LOVE TRAP"

by ROBERT TERRY SHANNON

COPYRIGHT BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS
Mary Kennedy, pretty secretary, becomes engaged to Buck Landers, wealthy sports promoter, who is much older. Later, Mary meets young Steve Moore, Landers' ward. They are attracted to one another immediately. Landers asks Steve to entertain Mary while he is out of town. The bond between the young couple grows but thoughts of Landers form a barrier. Mary tells Steve she does not want to marry Landers.

CHAPTER XIII
"I SUPPOSE Buck has his right to happiness, but so have you. You're young and you're sweet. You'll never be happy if you start off on the wrong foot. Weren't you ever in love with a fellow your own age?"
"I never really loved any fellow."
Suddenly there was a lurch of the taxi. It required no more than that, a sharp swish and a skid to avoid an accident, to substitute fact for conversation—to expose the hollowness of mere words. The momentary threw them together, the soft solidity of her body was swept against him—into his arms. Against her was the rough fabric of his coat; instinctively, automatically, his arms were around her.
There was another sweep of the machine as the driver spun the wheel for safety; in a moment the taxi had righted itself, and was speeding away. But there was a force, stronger than loyalty or propriety or fear, still compressing them together. They were in a corner of the back seat, secluded in motion, overpowered by an upsurge of feeling . . . powerful . . . inevitable . . .
How could their faces, their lips, be so close together without kissing? Neither took the initiative. At first their lips merely brushed but, at once, there was a fierce intensity. Mary slipped into his arms, surrendered breathlessly to the pressure of his embrace. For the first time, she knew, physically, the mighty rush of feeling that blotted out all the rest of everything. Her face lifted; Steve was looking at her, youthful madness in his eyes, and back of it all, were pangs of vague regret. Was this, pangs of vague regret. Was this, a trust betrayed?
"Maybe this is the answer to the whole business . . . I couldn't help what we did," he said softly. "If it could be like this forever . . . with the world shut out . . ."
He moved to kiss her again, but Mary ran her hand through his hair and pushed his head back—prolonged the delay, yet she did not deny him. Her heart was expanding, melting, but obscurely an inner voice was warning her . . . to be sure . . . to be sure . . .
Did love make itself known by such bewildering, golden warmth of strong desires and satisfactions? A vast gentle sweetness for Steve Moore was spreading in her breast—but this partook in no degree of wickedness. It was tender, mellow as moonlight. She thought not of herself, but of Steve . . . he was only a boy trying to cope with the beginning of life . . .
She wondered if this could be love—or mere tenderness? It was a million miles away from any feeling she could hold for Buck Landers or anyone else. A glamor, soft and implacable, was around them like an intoxicating aura. Banishing thought, she yielded herself into the arms that were drawing her closer. Their lips met and clung together in a strange, throbbing dream while the wind slept.
"My darling, Mary darling, what are we going to do?" Steve held her a little apart and searched the blue magnetic pools of her eyes. "Something has happened to me. I didn't dream—I swear I did dream-figure come to life out of her girlish imagination . . . He had materialized out of the thin iridescent fabric of another world.

Again he held her close and a trembling restfulness crept exquisitely through her soothed being. Abruptly, he put her out of his arms; shook his head as though he were clearing it of a fog.
"I'm a dog!"
With a smack, like the jar of a blow, she came back to reality . . . she had been necking . . . in a taxi-cab . . .
"How can I do a thing like that behind Buck's back?" he said hoarsely. "He trusted me with you. You couldn't help it—you're all unstrung and miserable. I can't get any place starting off like a rotten bounder!"
Steve's outburst of conscience might have been no more than a sharp reaction from the ecstasy of his contact with Mary, but its immediate effect was to make them both desperately unhappy. All the pleasure vanished out of the taxi window and they rode to her rooming house, each absorbed now in secret uncertainty. Puzzled and low-ebbed, she stepped out of the taxi, and he went up with her to her door. His features looked indistinct, he seemed blurred, unreal. "Well, good night, Steve," she said briefly.
"It might be best for me not to see you any more—alone," he said mournfully. "Not till Buck gets back anyway."
Her pride was hurt, but she tried not to show it.
"Right," she said mechanically. He nodded, and then abruptly went down the street; he looked back, smiled faintly and waved his

Even Mild Cases of Scarlet Fever Are Very Contagious

Great Increase of Cases in Recent Months Makes It Highly Important That Every Patient Be Quarantined and Given Proper Treatment.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

THERE has been an alarming increase in the number of cases of scarlet fever reported from all over the country within the past few months. Fortunately, most of the cases were of a mild form.

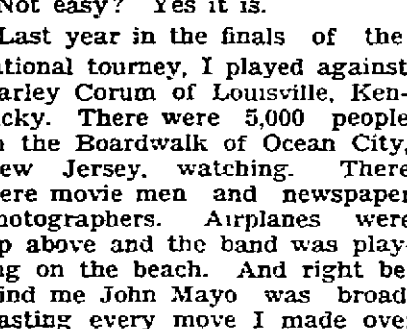

Scarlet fever is a highly contagious disease. It is often neglected and in this way is quickly spread from one child to another. Quarantine is necessary for all cases. Children who recover from scarlet fever should not be permitted to return to school without presentation of a physician's certificate. The disease comes on suddenly and the first symptoms noted are vomiting, sore throat, headache and fever. The rash of scarlet fever appears within twenty-four hours and is first seen on the neck and upper part of the chest. It is bright red in color and gradually spreads over the entire body. The rash lasts from three to ten days and then fades. After this the skin peels in scales or large pieces, producing what is called desquamation. Mild cases of scarlet fever require little treatment besides rest in bed and isolation; but please bear in mind that mild cases are quite as contagious as severe cases. Though

Herald Marble Tournay News

NERVOUSNESS BY JOHN JEFFRIES National Marble Champion.

Do you remember that time when you were almost scared to death? Sure you do. Big folks call it "nerves". You know nervousness is the booby-boob of a marble tournament. It sure has ruined a lot of possible champions. It's the easiest thing in the world to beat, though. Just forget the crowd, and think of that 10-foot ring and the 13 mibs in it. Not easy? Yes it is. Last year in the finals of the national tournay, I played against Harley Corum of Louisville, Kentucky. There were 5,000 people on the Boardwalk of Ocean City, New Jersey, watching. There were movie men and newspaper photographers. Airplanes were up above and the band was playing on the beach. And right behind me John Mayo was broadcasting every move I made over the Columbia radio chain. You know I just forgot all about that when I started to play. I lost that first game, and from then on all I thought of was the marble ring and how I could get that game back. It's nice to hear a crowd cheer but it sounds much nicer after you've won! Forget your nervousness, practice daily, play hard but fair and let's hope you'll get that grand trip to Ocean City. Don't forget I'm going to be mighty glad to meet the Circleville champion! Until then so long!

IT MUST BE MARBLE TIME.

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

Screen to Pulpit

Giving up a screen career and following "all that is worldly," Mrs. Edith Mae Pennington has taken up the life of an evangelist at New York, with the determination of saving "the wickedest city in the world." Mrs. Pennington came from a small town in Arkansas to win a beauty contest in St. Louis. Then to Hollywood and a job in the movies, but she was so shocked by what she saw that she decided to save the world.

Virginia Negro Horror Stricken By Finding Child; Hopes For Justice

By QUENTIN REYNOLDS
International News Service Staff Correspondent

HOPEWELL, N. J., May 13—William J. Allen, a mild mannered 42-year-old Virginia negro, found himself hurled into the spotlight of publicity today as a result of accidentally finding the pitiful remains of the Lindbergh baby less than five miles from the home from which it was kidnapped 73 days ago.

It was Allen who alighted from a truck yesterday afternoon on the road from Hopewell to Princeton to stare with fascinated horror at what had been the most famous baby in the world.

Allen, the father of four children and the grandfather of six was still so horror stricken this morning at having been singled out by fate to solve the mystery of the missing child that he could only grasp out his story in disconnected phrases.

"I just hope they get the devil who killed that baby," the negro said, as he sat in his Trenton home darning a six year old grandchild on his knee. "Only a devil could have done that." He lowered his voice to a whisper. "There was a big hole in the baby's head."

When he saw the child lying there he called to Orville Wilson who was riding the truck with him.

"I said to Orville, 'There is a baby lying here in the wood' Orville said 'What'll we do about it?' I told him we'd better tell Charley Williamson."

"The two men, forgetting the load of lumber they had set out after, hurried to Hopewell in search of Williamson, one of the two members of the police force.

"We looked all over for Charley," Allen continued stroking the knobby hair of the youngster who cooed happily on his knee. "Finally I see him in a barber shop and I tell him; 'Charley we found a baby in the wood' Charley said, 'Come in and tell me about it'."

"So I did and then we drove Charley and some state police back to where we found the baby. I let them off and then went home to get my dinner."

The child on his knee began to pull Allen's hair and the man halted his narrative to rub a loving hand over its face.

"I was having my dinner when the police came and took me to the garage at Col. Lindbergh's home. Up to then I never thought that it might be the little Lindbergh baby. I never thought that."

Dr. Charles H. Mitchell, county physician performed a post mortem on the body. The lines of the physician's face were grim as he came from the little room in the back of the morgue.

"That body has been there for at least two months," he said, "and it... was murder."

He revealed that the child might have been killed by a blow on the head or by pistol fire.

The skull was completely crushed. The sight of that pitiful figure which she had once nursed was too much for Betty Gow, who aided in the identification as she left the morgue she uttered a piteous cry.

"God, it's too terrible."

She swayed against the state trooper who had escorted her to Trenton and then was half lifted into the big closed car which was to take her back to the White House on the hill top—the house of sorrow.

The first made record time on his flight here from Newark, covering the distance in 6 hours and 19 minutes.

He preserved his usual reticence just before the takeoff, declaring himself "too busy with the matter in hand" to talk about it.

LONDON, May 13.—"He's going to have a rough passage," an air ministry official declared today in mapping out the weather in the path of Lou Reichers.

Leaving Newfoundland, the official said Reichers will run into snow and southerly to northwesterly winds, then encountering a deep depression smother practically the entire Atlantic.

Here, he will face northwest winds of from 30 to 40 miles an hour at an elevation of 2,000 feet. The weather will be cloudy.

At about the middle of the depression, Reichers will meet strong westerly winds and showers. Approaching Ireland, he will encounter a strong 40-mile an hour southwesterly wind.

SOUGHT ABROAD

Extending the fruitless search for the missing child, Major Charles Schoeffel of the New Jersey state police went to Europe in an effort to get a line on possible kidnappers.
